Poland Wants Another Large U.S. Shipment

WARSAW, Poland (AP) - Authoritative sources said today Poland has asked the United States for another large shipment of U.S. surplus grain, but under the "Food for Peace" aid program rather than as a commercial deal. It is believed this communist nation wants about a million tons of American wheat.

14 Poland must import about three million tons of grain in the coming year, following its second consecutive poor harvest.

The United States is expected to demand, as it did a year ago, that 1.18 Poland buy some wheat for cash as a condition for getting more on "Food for Peace" provides longterm credit, credit, secured by Polish currency useable by the United States only in Poland and redeemable in dollars at fixed future dates.

Expanded Trade With Russians Is Being Sought

By COL. RAY CROMLEY WASHINGTON (NEA) - A gov. ernment committee is now exploring ways to expand U.S. trade with the Soviet Union.

The committeemen are looking carefully at export items-now banned for export to the Soviet Union as stragegic-which might be "safely" okayed for shipment.

These items include ball besting, automotive and chemical machinery and machine tools, and agriculture equipment.

No consideration is being given to loosening export controls or military hardware in the strict sense. There will probably be no okays on sending chemical or fertilizer plans which could be converted to war production. But there is no doubt in the mind of officials working on the project that anything sent to Russia in the way of heavy industrial machinery and equipment will help the over-all military strength of the Soviet Union.

The committee includes representatives of the departments of State, Commerce, Agriculture, Interior and Defense

Representatives of the Central Intelligence Agency and the Atomic Energy Commission are sitting in on the discussions to give advice on what can be shipped to the Soviet Union with the least danger to United States security.

The work is divided into three major committees. There is an operating committee, composed of "working level" experts on trade and national security. Recommendations from this committee are passed on to a committee of assistant secretaries. At the top is a third committee which includes Secretary of State Rusk, Secretary of Defense McNamara, Secretary of Commerce Hodges.

Though no final decisions have yet been made, several items have already been bucked up to this top-level group for discussion.

The committee discussions are not limited to what the U.S. will sell the Soviet Union. The committeemen are also trying to determine what the U.S. should ask

Some tentative requests: a demand that Russia respect American patents and copyrights and that she abandon her practice of "dumping" goods on the world markets at prices below the cost of production in order to obtain political ends. Some of the committeemen would also like to have Russia agree to bind herself to the arbitration of commerical disputes.

The committee is also looking icans might want to import.

benefits are not the major aims of the exercise

The committee members think that U.S.-Soviet trade will not grow very much even if U.S. restrictions are loosened. "Maybe $200 million a year at most," says one. "The Soviet Union has little to sell that the U.S. wants. They have meager funds to buy from the U.S. without selling more here. It's mainly a matter of psy-

What psychology? Orders have been sent down to find ways to carry on the spirit of the test ban agreement. Top officials at the Department of State have decided that no agreements are likely on major issues-West Berlin. disarmament, border inspection teams, Communist infiltration of Latin America.

But some agreement must be found. The Russians have been putting on pressure for relaxation of U.S. export controls. As one official puts it, "It is awkward to tell them 'no' when we've just sined a test ban agreement and are supposed to be entering an era of better relations. We're afraid w'll set things back. But we'll always control arms and military equipment.

By TOM A. CULLEN LONDON (NEA) - "Lord Denning is a sweetie pie," said Mandy Rice-Davies, 18-year-old blande

Mandy should know, for she was one of the 160 witnesses whom Lord Denning questioned in connection with sex and security scandals growing out of the Profumo affair.

John Profumo resigned as British War Minister early this summer after it had been disclosed that he was sharing a mistress, Christine Keeler, with the Soviet Prime Minister Harold Macmillan asked Lord Denning, a distinguished jurist, to look into the security aspects of the Profumo case and "other related matters." In the course of doing so, Lord Denning interviewed Mandy and a number of other prostitutes.

"Lord Denning and his secretaries laughed quite a lot because I answered his questions frankly," Mandy, looking pert in a rose petal hat, told reporters.

The whole British nation would like to be let in on the joke, if there is one. For Lord Denning compiled a 65,000-word report of his 11 - week investigation for Prime Minister Macmillan.

Not since the original Kinsey reports has any document been awaited with such eagerness as this report.

The report is colored by the character of Lord Denning, himself, according to informed observers.

Not everyone would describe Alfred Thompson Denning, 64, Master of the Roles and second only to the Lord Chief Justice, as a "Sweetie pie." To some he is Denning the Dissenter, so named for the many dissenting opinions he has written while sitting on the High Court bench.

To others he is a blue-nosed Puritan whose rigid views should disqualify him from sitting in judgment on men of the world, including politicians.

To still others Lord Denning is something of a publicity hound. Lately the British press has been full of informal pictures of him chopping wood on his Hampshire estate, or fishing in hip boots, or flourishing his report as though it were the national budget.

One of these press photos nearly landed his lordship in trouble. It showed on the desk in front of him the draft of a letter to a cabinet minister whose name was clearly visible. In the letter Lord Denning invited the minister "to explain" certain rumors circulating in connection with his name.

Lord Denning comes from humble origins. His father was a haberdasher in the Hampshire village of Whitchurch (population 2,581). Denning, himself, attended the village school until he won a scholarship to Oxford University.

At Oxford he took an honors degree in law, and his rise in the legal profession was rapid until he became a judge at the age of 45. Today, as Master of the Roles, he presides over the Court of Appeal.

Lord Denning is an Anglican churchman, a nonsmoker and a nondrinker, though he has been known to take a glass of champagne at a village wedding. (He-still lives in Whitchurch where he was born.) One of his leastpublicized activities is that he is president of the National Marriage Guidance Council.

As a judge, Lord Denning strongly believes that judges should mold the law, not merely expound it. It is where moral principles are involved that he is most uncompromising. Some of his pronouncements on moral questions are of particularly interest viewed in the context of the Profumo inquiry: CRIME AND SIN: "It is impossible to draw the line between crime and sin. Morals are the concern of the law whether what is done is done in private or in ROLE OF RELIGION: "Without religion there can be no morality, and without morality there can be no law." ADULTERY: "It is no bar to advancement is any of the offices of the state, high or low, whereas any other form of stealing would mean the end of the career . . this is a thoroughly bad state of "LANS."

TOP PEOPLE: "R is disturb ing to see how many broken homes, how many matrimonial of-homes, how many matrimonial offences exist among those in high positions."

Weighing Lord Denning on past form, Prime Minister Macmillan has chosen one of the most severe judges of moral principle he could find to conduct the one-man inquiry.

As a Christian in the puritan tradition, Lord Denning could have been expected to find without fear or favor for any man, including the prime minister himself.
